BISHOP A. COKE SMITH.

The Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith who has recently been made a bishop by the General Conference of the Methodist Church in session in Dallas, Texas, is a South Carolinian, and we claim him as a Newberryman, he having married his wife in this city. The greater part of his ministry was spent in this State and his friends in South Carolina are legion. In honoring him the church is honoring himself. He is a preacher of great power and force and an humble Christian gentleman.

Tomorrow will be Sarah Calhoun Simonds, Day at the Charleston Exposition, so named in honor of the president of the woman's board of the Exposition. Mrs. Simonds, besides being a stockholder in the company, has given her time and best thoughts to the success of the undertaking, and especially the woman's department, and has contributed in no small degree towards that success. The editors who attended the meeting of the State Press Association in Charleston especially have pleasant recollections of Mrs. Simonds, and her efforts to make their stay while there a pleasant one. There should be a large attendance at the grounds tomorrow, especially the ladies of Charleston and of the State.

The statue of Count de Rochambeau was unveiled in Washington yesterday with imposing ceremonies, the French government, through its representatives and a special detachment of soldiers, taking part. President Roosevelt welcomed the representatives of France and Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, delivered the oration of the day.

Rochambeau was the leader of the French troops who played such a gallant and important part in the struggle for American independence from 1780 to 1782 and he himself was largely instrumental in bringing to a successful conclusion the campaign which culminated with the disastrous defeat of British arms on the field of Yorktown.

In honoring Rochambeau both the French and American republics honor themselves.

Lord Pauncefoot, British ambassador to the United States, died in Washington on Saturday. For some time he had been in failing health, but the end came more suddenly than was expected. His death will be felt in diplomatic circles, where he had played an important part for a good many years, having been the first ambassador to this country from Great Britain, he being minister when the rank of ambassador to the United States was created, and having held the office continuously since, although for some years he has passed the age limit. It is probable that his remains will be carried home on a United States battleship.

Kind Words About Newberry Odd Fellows.

The following items complimentary to Grand Master J. Marion Davis, and Cole L. Blease, Esq., of this city, are taken from The Carolina Odd Fellow, of the 20th inst., a journal devoted to the interest of Odd Fellowship, and speaks in the highest terms of both of these gentlemen:

Bro J. M. Davis, our present Grand Master, deserves great credit for his wonderful energy and push, which has placed him at our head.

Bro. Davis is truly a self-made man, who was the son of a widow lady. He started a few years ago to sweeping in a cotton mill, while a small boy. "Look now." He has kept on coming up until now he is the superintendent of one of the largest cotton mills in the South. His employers have given him the highest rank of their business. See what energy will do.

Bro. Davis is a young man of about thirty summers, and has been in our order only a few years, and has won the highest rank in our order, and to know him is to love him, as he carries that nice grace of manner that proves him to be a true gentleman.

Our order promises to grow most wonderfully in our State this year, and let us do everything in our power to assist our Grand Master to keep our order climbing up, not only in quantity but in quality and financially.

So let us go to work as we never have before and see what our effort will do. We will never know until we try. Let us try for the sake of duty if nothing else.

The speech of Hon. Cole L. Blease, of Newberry was simply grand. The large auditorium at the exposition grounds was well filled. The speaker was at his best. The brilliancy of his oratory was sublime, everybody was charmed. Some of his flights of eloquence was rapturous, while with the most beautiful word painting he dwelt on the benevolent feature of our Order. We noticed many of our good sisters of the Order of Rebekah who could not refrain from shedding the sympathetic tear. The speech as a whole was masterly and will not soon be forgotten. If you failed to hear it you simply missed one of the richest treats of your life.

Brother Blease is a most enthusiastic Odd Fellow and a brilliant member of the Newberry bar.

REMANDED TO STATE COURTS.

The case of Luther A. Riser vs. Southern Railway Co., Ordered by Judge Simonton Out of United States Court. The Decree.

A decree has been issued by Judge Simonton remanding the case of Luther A. Riser vs. Southern Railway Company, which had been taken to the United States Court by the defendant, to the State courts. The motion was made by Mr. Welch, of the firm of Johnstone & Welch, representing the plaintiff, and argued by him before Judge Simonton. The decree is of general interest, in that it possibly obviates the demand which has been made to have an Act passed by our Legislature to domesticate corporations of the charter of the Southern Railway, in order to prevent actions against them being taken to the United States Courts.

Riser's suit was for damages as a result of injuries received in a tail end collision at Camp Performance on the 27th of last September. He entered suit against the Southern Railway and the conductor in charge of the train upon which he was mail clerk in the sum of $15,000. The defendant, the railway company, removed the case to the United States Supreme Court on the ground of diversity of citizenship between itself and the plaintiff, the railroad being a corporation of Virginia and Riser a citizen of South Carolina. A motion was made in the United States Circuit Court, to which the case was removed, by Mr. Welch, of the firm of Johnstone & Welch, to have the case remanded on the ground that the cause of action against the two defendants was joint and not separable. The defendant resisted the motion on the ground that the cause of action against itself and Riser, the conductor, was separable and not joint. Judge Simonton, after hearing the argument pro and con, has ordered the case remanded to the State court, holding that the case showed a joint cause of action, and as the action was joint, the railroad company was not entitled to a removal, because Riser being a citizen of South Carolina, was entitled to have his case tried in the State courts.

JUDGE SIMONTON'S DECREE.

This case comes up on a motion to remand the case which had been removed from the State Court by the Southern Railway Company, on the ground that under the pleadings, a separable controversy exists against it. In discussing this question we have no concern with the merits of the case, nor can we be controlled by an opinion as to the necessary result if the case goes to a trial. It is a question of pleading. Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co. vs. Dixon, 179 U. S. 135.

Does the complaint set up a joint or several cause of action? "The cause of action is the subject matter of the controversy and that is for all the purposes of the suit whatever the plaintiff declares it to be in the pleadings. (Powers vs. C. & O. Ry. 169 U. S. 97). It may be that the plaintiff on the trial may be unable to establish the joint cause of action. It may be that his proof may show that one of the defendants is not guilty of the tort alleged and the other solely guilty. Perhaps a demurrer to the complaint on this ground may be sustained. "If the complaint should be so construed the question would still remain whether the cause of action was not entire as the case stood and the objection of the difference in the character of the liability matter of defense which might force an election or defeat the action as to one of the parties." Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co. vs. Dixon, 179 U. S. p. 139. In an action of tort the cause of action is whatever the plaintiff declares it to be in his pleading. Matters of defence cannot be availed of as ground for removal.

The complaint is against the Southern Railway Company and Marion Rich, one of its conductors. The plaintiff, a mail clerk on the train of the Southern Railway Company, managed by Rich the conductor, was injured in a collision and he brings this action against both of the defendants, charging that he was injured in the collision which was due to "joint and concurrent fault of the co-defendants." He sets out in his complaint that the immediate cause of the collision was the failure of Rich, the conductor, to observe certain rules and regulations of the company, and that this failure was due to the "joint and concurrent negligence, carelessness and fault of the said defendants." In all the paragraphs of his complaint he charges this joint and concurrent negligence, &c., as the cause of action. On this he must stand or fall. He may fail in his proof. His claim may not be sustained. But the cause of action is set up as joint, and the controversy is set up as joint, not separable.

There is another point of view. The complaint acts on the facts of the case, the injury of the plaintiff by reason, of the non-observance on the part of the conductor, the agent and representative of the railway company, of the rules established for his guidance, and charges that this negligence was the joint and concurrent negligence of the railway company and the conductor. Would it not be competent for the plaintiff to show that the conductor was a careless and unobservant person without the knowledge of the company, and on such showing claim that the injury was the joint and concurrent action of the two defendants?

Again, the complaint sets out that the plaintiff was injured by reason of the negligence of the railway company and of the conductor. Suppose that on the trial he proves that the conductor was negligent. The conductor is the representative of the corporation. His negligence is its negligence. If he is liable the corporation by reason of his liability is also liable. It would be vain for the railway company to prove the utmost care on its part in giving proper instructions to the conductor. If he be negligent, the corporation, notwithstanding its instructions, is guilty, because he was negligent.

"I am answerable for the wrongs of my servant or agent, not because he is authorized by me or personally represents me, but because he is about my affairs and I am bound to see that my affairs are conducted with due regard to the safety of others. (Pollock vs. Torts, Am. Ed. 89-90.) So when the servant of a railway company is guilty of negligence in the course of his employment, his negligence is the negligence of the Railway Company. It may be one act but the liability is the liability of both, the one cannot be separated from the other. The act of the conductor in contemplation of law is so far the act of the Master, that he is answerable for it. (Farnell vs. Boston & Worcester, R. R. Co., 4 Metcalf, 40.)"

Put it in another way. The gravamen of the complaint is injury to the plaintiff, caused by negligence in disobeying the rules of the company. If this be proven then the Conductor Rich certainly is responsible, and if he be responsible because of his negligence, as certainly the Railway Company, his principal, is also responsible. To defend itself the Railway Company must participate in the controversy of the conductor, and must maintain the same defence as he does that the collision was not caused by his negligence. However careful the railway company may have been in the issuance of its orders to prevent the collision, if that collision occurred by reason of the negligence of the conductor in obeying the orders, the railway company is liable. It cannot separate its case from that of the conductor. See Bagley vs. Manchester, etc., Ry. 3 Moak, 312.

This case cannot be distinguished from Dixon vs. Chesapeake and Ohio Ry. Co., 179 U. S. 131, and is controlled by it.

Let an order to remand be had.

Charles H. Simonton, Circuit Judge.

NEW FIRE HEADQUARTERS.

A Two Story Brick Building to be Erected on Nance Street—Horse Hough—Hose Wagon to Arrive in a Few Weeks

Congratulations are in order to the City Council.

Ward One gets the handsome new building to be erected for the Excelsior Fire Company's headquarters.

At the meeting of the City Council last week it was decided to erect a two-story brick building at the lower end of the city Market, on Nance street, for the headquarters of the Excelsior Fire Company.

The building is to be erected exclusively for this purpose. The ground floor is to be arranged suitably for the hose wagon, horse and stall and the upstairs will be arranged into two private rooms for the driver and an amusement hall for the firemen. The Council is now getting bids for the erection for the building, and we are informed that the work will begin just as soon as a bid can be decided on.

The committee has also purchased the handsome black horse from Mr. C. C. Davis, which will be the firemen's horse to use in the hose wagon, and we think in this a good selection has been made.

The wagon will be shipped in a week or two, and it is only a matter of a short time until the city will have the best fire protection it has ever had—that is all parts of the city—and for this congratulation to the city Council should be general.

We say, well done so far, gentlemen. Let the good work go.
